

Social and Personal

A throng of brilliantly gowned women filled the parlors of the Woman's Club yesterday afternoon from 5 to 7 o'clock for the reception tendered by the club to Miss Claire Guillaume. A color scheme of green and white was carried out everywhere and combined them with a green and white chiffon. The table in the dining room was set with a big basket of white flowers and candles shaded in silver and pale green. Only the members of the club and a few friends invited at Miss Guillaume's request were present. It was one of the most brilliant entertainments given during the history of the club and the parlors were crowded during receiving hours.

Mrs. W. G. Stanard, newly elected president of the club, stood at the head of the receiving line with the guest of honor, Miss Guillaume. Mrs. Stanard was dressed in black lace with trimmings of jet, and she wore pearls and diamonds and a corsage bouquet of lilies of the valley. Miss Guillaume was dressed in pale blue chiffon, fashioned over mesaline of the same shade and finished with lace. Others receiving were Miss Jane Rutherford, who wore an imported black lace robe made over white satin with pearl ornaments. Mrs. Archer Anderson, in black thread lace over white charmeuse. Mrs. William Ruffin Cox, in a gown of pink crepe over white satin, embroidered in beads and trimmed with chintilly lace. Mrs. L. L. Lewis, in white marquisette over satin and real lace. Mrs. Christopher Tompkins, who wore a gown of cream-colored pineapple tissue pleated in dull blue and green and draped over lace pinnacles, with pearl ornaments. Mrs. W. A. Crenshaw, in pale gray crepe over embroidered in cut steel beads and trimmings of chintilly lace. Mrs. Thomas Cary Johnson, wearing a gown of gray chiffon over pink satin. Mrs. Moses D. KHEDIVE IS ENTIRELY RELIEVED OF POWER

Persistent Rumors That He Intends to Abdicate in Favor of Son.

BY LA MARQUESE DE FONTENAY.
KHEDIVE Abbas, despite the pressure quietly brought to bear upon him to confide the education of his two boys either to English schools or to English tutors, has placed them in a private school at Neuchatel, owned and managed by relatives of that Swiss chief private secretary, Rouillier Pasha, whose English influence upon the Egyptian ruler was largely responsible for the many angry quarrels which took place between himself and Lord Cromer, as well as Lord Kitchener, during the first few years of his reign. In fact, Lord Cromer eventually exacted of the Khedive the dismissal of Rouillier Pasha, and his departure from Egypt. That Abbas should have confided the education of his sons to members of the Rouillier family in Switzerland, shows that he has neither forgotten nor forgiven the English for having forced him to get rid of his Swiss ex-tutor, secretary-general and most intimate friend and adviser.

Persistent rumors, I may add, are current in Egypt, Constantinople, and in official and financial circles at Vienna, Paris and London, to the effect that the Khedive is bent upon abdicating in favor of his now fourteen-year-old son, Prince Mohammed, owing to the manner in which every vestige of power has passed out of his hands into those of Field Marshal Lord Kitchener, who is the latter's appointment as British Plenipotentiary in Egypt, and likewise because of the constant agitation and intrigues of the Egyptian Nationalists.

There is any delay in his renouncing his throne, it is owing to his being unwilling to make arrangements for the regency during his son's minority, provide for the status of his second wife, (born a Hungarian Countess Tokot, twice divorced from Austrians, and formerly a concert singer) and also because he wishes to secure for himself a suitable allowance, and the safeguard of his extensive estates in Egypt.

Prince Louis Murat, Godson of Napoleon III, showed in his boyhood a pronounced taste for everything pertaining to the sea, and joined the French navy, becoming a famous schoolship Borda, whence all French naval officers for several generations past have graduated. As a midshipman serving on a man-of-war in West Indian waters, he almost succumbed to an attack of yellow fever. He took part in the French naval operations in the war of 1870, and after its close, he was sent to the connection with the Bonaparte family, his naval career in France was ended, he entered the naval service of Sweden, and on receiving a commission as lieutenant, was appointed naval aide-camp to his kingman, King Charles XV. He was maintained in the same office by King Oscar, and only left the service of the Swedish crown on the occasion of his marriage to the enormously wealthy widow of Prince Alexander Orbellani, owner of vast estates in Southern Russia, especially in the Crimea. Thenceforth he devoted his time between his wife's country places in the Crimea, and his house in Paris, on the Boulevard Flamin.

His eldest son, Prince Eugene, was killed in a particularly shocking automobile accident in Bavaria, in 1910, leaving a small boy and two little girls by his marriage with Violet Ney, a great-granddaughter of Marshal Ney, and a sister of the Prince de la Moskowa, and of the Duke of Richelieu. The late Prince Louis's other and only surviving son is Prince Michael, who is an officer on the reserve list of the French Fourth Regiment of Hussars.

There is now only one survivor of the children of Caroline Fraser's marriage with Prince Lucien Murat, namely, Anna, widow of Duke de Mouchy, of the Chateau de Mouchy, and the mother of Henri de Noailles, the present and seventh Duc de Mouchy, and Prince-Duke of Poix. The widowed Duchess de Mouchy, who until some years ago was the most intimate friend of Empress Eugenie, was born in the United States, at Bordentown, N. J., and like her brother, Prince Louis Murat, who has just died, has never entirely got rid of a slight American accent in talking French.

Grandduchess Stana, of Russia, daughter of King Nicholas, of Montenegro, gave evidence in a characteristically feminine fashion during her recent visit to France with her husband, the Grandduke Nicholas Nicholasovitch, of her sympathy with the desires of France to recover the latter's lost provinces of Alsace and Lorraine. For while the grandduke, after attending the great military manoeuvres of the French army in his capacity as de facto generalissimo of the Russian forces, was inspecting the powerful defensive works of the eastern frontier, the grandduchess motored out from Nancy to the village of Brincur-Selle, which is situated on the very border line separating France from Lorraine.

She did not cross the frontier, but caused some of the women of the village to place for her a large bunch of field flowers on the other side of the line and these she carried with her throughout the remainder of the day. Moreover, at 6 o'clock in the evening, when she rejoined her husband at the railway station at Toul, to return to Paris before traveling back to St. Petersburg, the last thing which the numerous French generals, officers, and civilian dignitaries saw, as the special train moved out of the station, was the grandduchess bowing, while holding the bouquet of Lorraine flowers to her face.

It was a particularly feminine and at the same time very telling manner of informing the French people that she was in complete accord with their longings to recover the lost provinces of Alsace and Lorraine from Germany, a purpose which can only be accomplished by force of arms. The grandduchess is a very clever.

and striking looking view of the tall, Juncoque 1794, her low forehead, raven tresses, heavily marked eyebrows, perfectly modelled eyes well apart, sombre, large, and very business, her straight line, classical mouth and chin, cheeks firm and round, and intensely expressive and sensitive nostrils, indicating Balkan birth and origin. She is in every way a suitable consort for Grandduke Nicholas, who is the tallest and most distinguished looking prince of the reigning house of Russia, although the cut of his very gray, pointed beard and turned-up mustache gives him a slightly Mephistophelian appearance.

Stana was his Egeria long before she married him, being entirely separated from her former husband, the late Duke of Leuchtenberg, who died last year. It was not until Alexander III's death, and the demise of the grandduke's own morganatic consort, the extremely wealthy widow of a Moscow tea merchant, of the name of Boutourline, that she was able to marry Prince Nicholas, and to become the wife of Grandduke Nicholas.

Rocky Mount, Va., October 1.—A marriage of much interest here and one which came as a complete surprise to all save the bride and groom, took place at Christ Church, Roanoke, Saturday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock by Rev. Archer Boucher, when Miss Lucy Talaforte Price, of Rocky Mount, became the bride of George Cabell Greer, eldest son of Mayor C. S. Greer and Mrs. Greer, of Rocky Mount.

Only a few friends and relatives were present, and immediately after the ceremony Mr. and Mrs. Greer took a train for Washington, where they will spend a few days before going to Richmond to live.

The bride left Rocky Mount Thursday for Monongah, W. Va., to visit her uncle, Mayor Thomas G. Price, and the marriage was to have taken place there, but stopping in Roanoke a few days to do some shopping, she was joined Friday by the bridegroom, who persuaded her to marry him at once, as his business demanded his presence in Richmond. He accordingly proceeded to Rocky Mount, where he was issued a marriage license by his brother, Edwin Greer, assistant clerk of the court, who kept his secret until news of the marriage was learned here last Saturday evening.

The bride is the daughter of the late Owen H. Price, clerk of the Circuit Court at the time of his death. The bridegroom has been employed in the Land Registration Office at Richmond for several years, and was one of the legislative clerks at the last session of the General Assembly, since which time he has been employed at a law company, with headquarters at Richmond.
